Defendants submit this brief reply to Plaintiff's Supplemental Brief regarding the impact of Backlund v. Barnhart, 778 F.3d 1386 (9th Cir. 1985). Plaintiff's attempts to distinguish Backlund from the case at bar are overly technical and ignore the foundational principle of the Ninth Circuit's opinion—namely, that foster parents do not possess an unlimited and unfettered constitutional right to impose their religious beliefs on foster children in the care and custody of a state. Plaintiff's arguments are neither persuasive nor new.

Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Backlund on the grounds that Backlund dealt with a specific child, whereas Ms. Bates does not have a specific child in mind. See Pl.'s First and Third Reasons, Pl.'s Supp. Br. at 1, 3. According to Plaintiff, she has been “categorically excluded at the door” because of her religion. Id. However, the record shows clearly that the Oregon Department of Human Services (ODHS) did not exclude her at the door; ODHS did not ask questions or solicit information relating to her religious speech or conduct. Instead, her application was processed as any other potential resource family's application would be. Ms. Bates's application was only denied after she expressed to ODHS that she would not comply with OAR 413-200-0308(2)(k). See Appendix to Jessica Bates' Declaration in Support of Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction, ECF #15-1 at 4 (Plaintiff's email to certification officer Cecilia Garcia, referring to the requirement to “respect, accept, and support children whose preferred pronouns & identity don't match their biological sex,” and stating, “I need to let you know I cannot support this behavior in a child”); id. at 8 (letter denying Plaintiff's application, explaining that Plaintiff indicated that she “would not support [a child's] lifestyle or encourage any behavior related to their sexual orientation or gender identity or expression”). ODHS made no judgment or assumptions about whether Ms. Bates's religion would interfere with her ability to comply with the rules. ODHS did not categorically, or individually, “label[Ms. Bates] unfit to parent based on her religious beliefs.” Pl.'s Supp. Br., ECF #44 at 2. Plaintiff identified herself as unable to comply with ODHS's rules designed to protect and support children in ODHS's care, and ODHS rejected her application as they would the application of any applicant who indicated they would not comply with rules governing the care of children and young adults in ODHS care and custody.

Plaintiff next contends that “a case about rights clearly established in 1985 says little about what is a constitutional right in 1985, much less 2023,” and then cites to Fulton v. City of Philadelphia, 141 S.Ct. 1868 (2021) and 303 Creative LLC v. Elenis, 143 S.Ct. 2298 (2023), as examples of what are current clearly established rights. Id. at 2 (emphasis in original). But neither of those cases address whether foster parents have a clearly established right to the unlimited exercise of their religious beliefs and speech on children placed in their homes. And it is the fact that these are children in the care of the state that makes it so critical that ODHS act to protect those children, regardless of their sexual orientation, gender identity, and gender expression. With respect to Plaintiff’s attempt to distinguish this case from Backlund on the grounds that Ms. Bates doesn’t intend to use corporal punishment, that argument ignores that the crux of the issue in this case is whether the state can impose requirements on a resource parent’s or adoptive resource’s conduct in caring for children in state custody.

Plaintiff’s suggestion that ODHS could simply avoid placing specific children with Plaintiff if those children, for example, “went by neopronouns,” is not an option. See Pl.’s Fifth and Sixth Reasons. First, Ms. Bates has requested a child under the age of 10. Many children at that age will not know or will not be comfortable expressing a different gender identity. Second, gender identities can also change over time. Third, once an adoption is finalized, Ms. Bates wouldn’t be able to simply “give back” a child whose SOGIE differs from their biological sex. And finally, even if the child has not been adopted, there could be significant disruption and harm associated with being put back in foster care simply for expressing their SOGIE. In short, relying on the placement process is not an option for protecting the health, welfare, and safety of children in foster care. See Defs.’ Opp’n to Pl.’s Mot. for Prelim. Inj., ECF # 25 at 34–35.

Finally, Plaintiff’s slippery slope arguments are unpersuasive. Ms. Bates proactively informed ODHS that she would not comply with OAR 413-200-0308(2)(k). If any applicant, regardless of their religion, stance on interracial marriage, sexual orientation, or any other characteristic informed ODHS that they would not comply with OAR 413-200-0308(2)(k), that application could be rejected. In short, Backlund is correct that there is no unfettered First Amendment right to exercise one's beliefs on children who are in the state's care and custody. That is particularly true when a state has imposed requirements relating to the protection of those children, and the potential caregiver has asserted her inability and unwillingness to comply with those laws.

DATED September 20, 2023.
